The academic year began with great excitement around our October events focused on the presidential campaigns and the on-campus debate. The November election and its emotional aftermath reminded us all, yet again, that deep fault lines run through our democracy and divide the country. In this climate of fear, mistrust, and anger, the bridging work we attempt to do at the Center has seemed more crucial than ever this year. After a Jewish cemetery in St. Louis was desecrated in February, we quickly pulled together a public event on “Turning Hate to Humanity,” featuring a dialogue between local Jewish leader Andrew Rehfeld and an American Muslim leader, Tarek El-Messidi, who spearheaded a fundraising campaign for cemetery repairs. The following month, the Presiding Bishop of The Episcopal Church, Michael Curry, spoke to a standing-room-only crowd about “Healing a House Divided” and repairing our fractured nation. Such events represent the broad public work that we will continue to do in hopes of restoring trust in a time of fear.

Thank you for everything you do to facilitate our research and scholarship, classroom teaching, and broader public work.

“Strong scholarship on the many intersections of religion and politics anchors the Center’s wide-ranging work with students, national leaders across many fields, and the broader public.”

— R. MARIE GRIFFITH
Director, John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics
Engaging a wide range of citizens beyond the university is one of the Center’s clear aims. Even as we continue developing excellent scholarship and educating the students of Washington University in St. Louis, we intend to reach broader audiences with important ideas, tools, and strategies for living in a religiously and politically pluralistic democracy. Our public events and online journal, Religion & Politics, offer important ways to meet our commitments to disseminate the work of scholars and thinkers and foster civil debate and robust discussion among persons holding diverse and even divergent viewpoints.
E.J. Dionne Jr. and David Brooks explore the topic “Religion and National Politics” in the second Danforth Dialogues conversation.

1. A student takes the opportunity to have E.J. Dionne personalize his recent book. 2. Natasha Trethewey offers thoughts to the audience as Eboo Patel listens. 3. DANFORTH DIALOGUES: ENVISIONING THE FUTURE OF RELIGION AND POLITICS IN AMERICA

10|08|16 On the eve of the second presidential debate hosted at Washington University in St. Louis, the John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics convened a group of exceptionally thoughtful, dynamic commentators to participate in “The Danforth Dialogues” to explore the place of religion in our current politics and public life, along with future possibilities. The event consisted of a set of two conversations moderated by Krista Tippett, host of the Peabody Award-winning On Being radio show and podcast. The first conversation, themed “Religion and Conceptions of the Common Good,” featured Eboo Patel, Founder and President of Interfaith Youth Core, and Natasha Trethewey, Pulitzer Prize-winning poet and former Poet Laureate of the United States. The second conversation, themed “Religion and National Politics,” featured David Brooks and E.J. Dionne, two of America’s most prominent political commentators and influential authors.

“In this increasingly polarized political climate, the Danforth Dialogues were insightful discussions between the event speakers that gave me hope in the power of humanity and restored my faith that there can be respectful dialogue related to religion, politics, and the common good.”

The Center supported continuing conversations around the upcoming historic 2016 presidential election with a public event featuring presidential historian, Contributing Editor at TIME, and Pulitzer Prize-winning author Jon Meacham. The campus visit included a book signing, a lunch with students, a public lecture, and a reception. Meacham’s address, “Faith and Power: Religion and the American Presidency from the Founding to Trump v. Clinton,” focused on the religious motivations and evocations of the country’s presidents. As he stated, “the presidency has been shaped by religious thought, by religious impulses, and by religious rhetoric from the very beginning.”

“The past presidential election pushed many of us to think and rethink about the ways that we conceive of the relationships among popular democracy, moral imperative, and political theory.”

WORK AS WORSHIP: EMERSON’S EMANCIPATING RELIGIOUS AND POLITICAL JOURNEY

12/07/16 David Robinson delivered this inaugural Thomas Lamb Eliot Lecture, which offered a spiritual autobiography of Ralph Waldo Emerson that traced the struggles and crises that led him from spokesman for a newly emerging spirituality to a prominent role in the antislavery movement and the political battle for the principle of emancipation. This new lecture series is named for a member of the first class (1862) of Washington University in St. Louis and the son of the university’s founder, William Greenleaf Eliot. Professor Robinson is a Distinguished Professor of American Literature and Director of the Center for the Humanities at Oregon State University and is a renowned scholar of Emerson, Margaret Fuller, Henry David Thoreau, and other authors connected with the New England Transcendentalist movement.

THE ART AND POLITICS OF AFRICAN AMERICAN FAITH

02/01/17 Josef Sorett explored the terrain of presumably “secular” African American literature and popular music — drawing from episodes across the 20th century to the contemporary moment — as a novel means for engaging black faith traditions and inviting new conversations about American religion and politics. Professor Sorett is an Associate Professor of Religion and African-American Studies at Columbia University, where he also directs the Center on African-American Religion, Sexual Politics and Social Justice (CARSS). This lecture was co-sponsored with the African and African-American Studies Department and the English Department’s Religion and Literature Reading Group.

2. Sorett introduces a video clip of Chance the Rapper as part of his lecture.
3. Laura Maffly-Kipp, Sorett, and Lerone Martin welcome Fannie Blaise’s comments after the lecture.
02|09|17 In recent years, the U.S. government and the Christian conservative movement have been at odds over SOGI human rights. While U.S. policy supports SOGI human rights, the Christian Right opposes these human rights and works to undermine their institutionalization around the world. In this talk, Cynthia Burack examined the Christian Right’s case against SOGI human rights, as well as some of its hidden dimensions and internal contradictions. Professor Burack is professor of Women’s, Gender and Sexuality Studies at The Ohio State University. This lecture was cosponsored by the Law, Identity, and Culture Initiative of the Law School and The Workshop in Politics, Ethics and Society (WPES) in the Department of Political Science in Arts & Sciences.

AN AMERICAN CONSCIENCE: THE REINHOLD NIEBUHR STORY FILM SCREENING AND PANEL DISCUSSION

03|06|17 The Center was pleased to present with Eden Theological Seminary an advance screening of this new documentary film, which explores the life and impact of theologian Reinhold Niebuhr. The screening was followed by a panel discussion moderated by Professor Marie Griffith, with panelists including the filmmaker Martin Doblmeier, Rev. Dr. David Greenhaw, President of Eden Seminary; and Dr. Healan Gaston, Harvard Divinity School.

1. Filmmaker Martin Doblmeier discusses the evolution of his Niebuhr project as panelists Gaston and Greenhaw listen. 2. The film screening begins for the audience in Washington University’s Emerson Auditorium. 3. Professor Robin Lovin, a film contributor, offers the audience his reflection about Niebuhr’s legacy.
JEWS AND MUSLIMS TURN HATE TO HUMANITY: INTERFAITH COLLABORATION IN TIMES OF RELIGIOUS VIOLENCE

Recent and recurring acts of violence against the American Jewish and Muslim communities remind us of the persistence of ethno-religious hate. Expressions of solidarity between Jews and Muslims in the wake of these events have shown that such hate can and should be collectively addressed. Locally, the fundraising efforts by Muslim organizations such as CelebrateMercy for Chesed Shel Emeth Cemetery in the wake of recent desecration were inspiring to our St. Louis community and to the wider nation. In this context, the Center was pleased to bring together two leaders from the Jewish and Muslim communities to talk deeply about what it means to partner and support one another across religious and political lines, despite potential differences on geopolitical issues. Director Marie Griffith moderated a conversation between Tarek El-Messidi, Founding Director of Philadelphia-based CelebrateMercy, and Andrew Rehfeld, President and CEO of the Jewish Federation of St. Louis.

“I was blown away by the dialogue. What struck me the most was the openness and honesty they each brought with them to the conversation. It was an honor to witness and take part in that exchange.”

1. El-Messidi learns from Anita Feigenbaum, Executive Director of a local Jewish cemetery, about desecration to the site as Marie Griffith and Maharat Rori Picker Neiss listen. El-Messidi helped lead a Muslim effort to raise funds and presented a check to Feigenbaum for repair.
2. Andrew Rehfeld, Michael Ginsburg, and Tarek El-Messidi pose for a picture after the on-stage conversation.
3. A local Christian minister asks a question of the Jewish and Muslim speakers during the Q&A portion of the event.
After his lecture, Curry relishes the opportunity to meet attendees including local Episcopal priest The Rev. Kelly Carlson.

04|04|17 The Most Reverend Michael Curry addressed an overflow crowd in the University’s Graham Chapel with his message for the current time. He suggested two ways to heal the country: by reviving human relationships across difference and by reclaiming shared values and ideals instead of focusing on the divisions on issues. Curry is Presiding Bishop of The Episcopal Church and was introduced by Sen. John C. Danforth, himself an ordained Episcopal priest, who believes there is great value in religious institutions focusing beyond themselves and speaking to the nation.

“High energy comes to mind when I think about Bishop Curry’s talk! His lecture about the revival of relationships and community called us to action with a battle cry that “Love Transcends.”

DYNAMIC LEADERS

A cohort of outstanding scholars and teachers, academic associates, trusted advisors, and talented staff guides the Center’s work toward its goals. Our faculty represent some of the foremost scholars in their fields and our postdoctoral fellowship program supports exceptionally promising early-career scholars who teach and pursue major research projects while in residence. The Center is enriched by fostering intellectual and collaborative opportunities among Center faculty and fellows, as well as across the wider university and beyond.
Marie Griffith, the John C. Danforth Distinguished Professor in the Humanities at Washington University in St. Louis, is currently the director of the John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics and the editor of the Center’s journal, Religion & Politics.

Professor Griffith obtained her undergraduate degree at the University of Virginia in Political and Social Thought and her Ph.D. in the study of religion from Harvard University. She held consecutive postdoctoral fellowships at Princeton University and Northwestern University before joining the Princeton faculty as associate director of the Center for the Study of Religion. She earned tenure in 2003 and was promoted to Professor of Religion in 2005. While at Princeton, Griffith directed the women and gender studies program, and she was awarded both the President’s Award for Distinguished Teaching and the Cotsen Fellowship for Distinguished Teaching. She spent two years on the Harvard University faculty as the John A. Bartlett Professor before moving to Washington University in 2011. In 2015 she was appointed a Distinguished Lecturer for the Organization of American Historians.

Her first major publication was God’s Daughters: Evangelical Women and the Power of Submission (University of California Press, 1997), which examines the practices and perceptions of contemporary evangelical women. Her other books, edited volumes, and articles exhibit Griffith’s varied scholarship. Her next book, scheduled for fall 2017, is titled Moral Combat: How Sex Divided American Christians and Fractured American Politics. Griffith is a frequent media commentator and public speaker on current issues pertaining to religion and politics, including the changing profile of American evangelicals and ongoing conflicts over gender, sexuality, and marriage.

"Engaging with those whose positions are the furthest from mine has been one of the most rewarding parts of Professor Griffith’s class. Open, honest, and respectful dialogue builds empathy and bridges divides.”

— CHLOE ZACK
Washington University, Class of 2020

John Inazu is the Sally D. Danforth Distinguished Professor of Law and Religion, a dual appointment in the Washington University Law School and the Center on Religion and Politics.

He has written broadly for mainstream audiences in publications including USA Today, CNN, and The Washington Post.

Professor Inazu was the law school’s 2014 David M. Becker Professor of the Year. Prior to joining the law faculty, he was a visiting assistant professor at Duke University School of Law and a Royster Fellow at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He clerked for Judge Roger L. Wollman of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit and served for four years as an associate general counsel with the Department of the Air Force at the Pentagon.

Inazu earned his Ph.D. at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, and his J.D. and B.S.E. at Duke University.

“I’ve been privileged to have the opportunity to speak about confident pluralism on college campuses around the country and even as far away as China. It is gratifying to have such an enthusiastic engagement with my ideas.”

— JOHN INAZU

Laurie Maffly-Kipp joined the Center in 2013 and is the Archer Alexander Distinguished Professor. Maffly-Kipp’s research and teaching focus on African American religions, Mormonism, religion on the Pacific borders of the Americas, and issues of intercultural contact. Her publications are many and include Religion and Society in Frontier California (Yale University Press, 1994), where she explored the nature of Protestant spiritual practices in Gold Rush California, and Setting Down the Sacred Past: African-American Race Histories (Harvard University Press, 2010). Currently she is working on a survey of Mormonism in American life that will be published by Basic Books. She is the recipient of numerous fellowships and grants, including a grant for a collaborative project on the History of Christian Practice from the Lilly Endowment, Inc., fellowships at the National Humanities Center, and an NEH Fellowship for University Professors. Her work in African American religion was honored with the James W.C. Pennington Award from the University of Heidelberg in 2014. Maffly-Kipp is a past president of the American Society of Church History and the Mormon History Association. Prior to joining the Center, Maffly-Kipp taught for twenty-four years at University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in Religious Studies and American Studies. She earned her B.A. from Amherst College in English and Religion, summa cum laude, and completed the Ph.D. in American History at Yale University with distinction (1990).

We provide a space to engage in conversation across traditions and deep religious and political divides in a moment when such spaces are in short supply.

Lerone A. Martin joined the faculty of the John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics as Assistant Professor of Religion and Politics in 2014 after a one-year postdoctoral fellowship with the Center. Martin earned his B.A. from Anderson University and his Master of Divinity Degree from Princeton Theological Seminary before completing his Ph.D. at Emory University in 2011. Prior to coming to Washington University, Martin was Assistant Professor of American Religious History and Culture at Eden Theological Seminary. His first book project was the award-winning Preaching on Wax: The Phonograph and the Making of Modern African American Religion (New York University Press, 2014), which tracks the role of the phonograph in the shaping of African American religion, culture, and politics during the first half of the twentieth century. Currently he is researching the historic relationship between religion and the F.B.I. In support of his research, Martin has received fellowships from the Louisville Institute for the Study of American Religion, Emory University’s Howard Hughes Medical Institute, The Fund for Theological Education, and Princeton University’s Program (now Center) for African American Studies. Martin was selected as a member of the Young Scholars in American Religion 2014-2016 cohort and The Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation named him a 2017 Nancy Weiss Malkiel Scholar.

I have taken three of Dr. Martin’s classes and was impressed every time with his passion for the topic, ability to engage students in readings, discussions, and lectures, and the way he structured the class to be very applicable to issues in the past or today.

Washington University, Class of 2017
Leigh Eric Schmidt is the Edward C. Mallinckrodt Distinguished University Professor in the Humanities at Washington University in St. Louis. He joined the John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics in 2011. From 2009 to 2011, he was the Charles Warren Professor of the History of Religion in America at Harvard University; from 1995 to 2009, he taught at Princeton University where he was the Agate Brown and George L. Collord Professor of Religion and served as chair of the Department of Religion; and, from 1989 to 1995, he taught in the Theological and Graduate Schools of Drew University. He has held research fellowships at Stanford and Princeton and also through the National Endowment for the Humanities, the American Council of Learned Societies, the American Philosophical Society, and the Guggenheim Foundation. In 2015 he was appointed a Distinguished Lecturer for the Organization of American Historians. Schmidt has authored many books about different aspects of American religious history. His latest book, Village Atheists: How America’s Unbelievers Made Their Way in a Godly Nation (Princeton University Press, 2016) examines how atheists and freethinkers have fared in American public life. He has often commented on current issues in American religion and culture through various media outlets including The Atlantic, The New York Times, The Wall Street Journal, and U.S. News and World Report, among others. He serves on the editorial boards of the Journal of the American Academy of Religion, Religion and American Culture, Practical Matters, and Religion & Politics.

Leigh Eric Schmidt earned his undergraduate degree in history and religious studies from the University of California, Riverside, in 1983 and his Ph.D. in religion from Princeton in 1987.

Mark Valeri joined the faculty in 2014 and is the Reverend Priscilla Wood Neaves Distinguished Professor of Religion and Politics with the Center. Valeri’s areas of specialization include religion and social thought, especially economics, in America; Reformation theology and the political history of Calvinism; Puritanism; and enlightenment moral philosophy. Valeri came to Washington University from Union Presbyterian Seminary in Richmond, Virginia, where he served as the Ernest Trice Thompson Professor of Church History since 1996. His prior appointment was in the Religious Studies department at Lewis and Clark College.

His most recent book, Heavenly Merchandize: How Religion Shaped Commerce in Puritan America (Princeton University Press, 2010), analyzes social transformations in the American economy from the early 1600s, when Puritans argued that personal profit should be subordinate to the common welfare, to the 1740s, when Christians increasingly celebrated commerce as an unqualified good. His publication list is extensive and includes many book chapters, journal articles, and essays.

Mark Valeri has received several fellowships, including an Andrew W. Mellon fellowship, a National Endowment for the Humanities fellowship, an American Council of Learned Societies grant, and a Lilly Endowment faculty fellowship. Valeri earned the Ph.D. from Princeton University, his M.Div. from Yale Divinity School, and his B.A., summa cum laude, from Whitworth College.

He is currently working on religious conversion, belief, and political liberty in the eighteenth century.

“To describe Professor Valeri’s teaching as engaged and engaging would be an understatement. More than perhaps any professor I’ve taken, he has a knack for imperceptibly pressing students to ask deeper questions of history and themselves.”

Cassie Adcock is Associate Professor in the Department of History and in the Religious Studies program at Washington University in St. Louis. She specializes in religion in the political culture of modern north India. Her work has been supported by a Fulbright Scholar Award, an NEH-AIIS Senior Research Fellowship, and a Kluge Fellowship. Adcock earned her Ph.D. from the University of Chicago.

Andrew R. Rehfeld currently serves as President and CEO of the Jewish Federation of St. Louis. He is also Associate Professor of Political Science at Washington University in St. Louis. Rehfeld’s research focuses on contemporary democratic theory with related interests in the history of political thought and the philosophy of the social sciences. He earned his Ph. D. from the University of Chicago.

Abram C. Van Engen is Assistant Professor of English at Washington University in St. Louis. He specializes in early American religion, literature, and culture, focusing on Puritanism, sentimentalism, and the history of emotion. He received a 2016-17 fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities. He earned his Ph. D. from Northwestern University.

VISITING SCHOLAR

Elizabeth Leibold McCloskey was a Danforth Visiting Scholar in residence at the Center for the 2016-17 academic year. She is a past president and CEO of The Faith & Politics Institute in Washington, D.C. Her writing has been published in various scholarly and lay outlets including Commonweal and The Washington Post. Currently she is working on a book project focused on spiritual biographies of political leaders. McCloskey earned her Ph.D. from the School of Theology and Religious Studies at The Catholic University of America, her master’s degree in social ethics at Yale Divinity School, and her bachelor’s degree in Religion and History at the College of William and Mary.

1. Center offices are found in Umrah Hall.
Christine Croxall earned her Ph.D. in history at the University of Delaware. Her dissertation analyzes how Catholics and Protestants competed to missionize the Mississippi River Valley, from St. Louis to New Orleans, between 1780-1830, and how the region’s inhabitants — white, Native American, and African-descended — reacted to and shaped the agendas of the missionaries sent to convert them. Dr. Croxall taught the course, “Whose St. Louis? Religion, Race, and Power in the Gateway City,” in fall 2016.

Moshe Kornfeld earned his Ph.D. in anthropology from the University of Michigan in 2015 and then held a postdoctoral fellowship and visiting lectureship at the University of Colorado Boulder. His research takes the study of American Jews as a lens through which to analyze complicated intersections of religion, economy, and politics. His current project investigates Jewish philanthropy, service, and activism in Post-Katrina New Orleans. Dr. Kornfeld taught a class in fall 2016, “Black-Jewish Relations in the United States.”

Dana Logan earned her Ph.D. in religious studies from Indiana University and comes to Washington University most recently from a teaching position at Mercyhurst University. Her work focuses on religious rituals in American democracy and their intersection with political, consumer, and artistic practice. Her current project aims to explain the religious heritage of these mores and the context in which they operate in contemporary U.S. society. Dr. Logan taught a spring 2017 course, “Performing Religion, Ritualizing Gender.”

Gene Zubovich earned his Ph.D. in history from the University of California, Berkeley, and comes to Washington University in St. Louis from a teaching position there. His research traces the origins of today’s political polarization, with a focus on religious responses to globalization in the twentieth century. His work includes “The Global Gospel: Protestant Internationalism and American Liberalism in the Twentieth Century.” Dr. Zubovich co-taught a course with Professor Elizabeth Borgwardt (History) in spring 2017, “History of U.S. Foreign Relations Since 1920.”

“The postdoc was a great space for making the transition from graduate student to faculty member. I was able to try out a number of courses and explore topics that were more tangential to my primary research.”

She also has written for The Atlantic, National Journal, and The Daily Beast, among other publications. In 2015, she was a finalist for the National Magazine Award for Public Interest, and her work was anthologized in The Best American Magazine Writing. She holds degrees in journalism and English from the University of Georgia, in addition to a Master of Divinity from Harvard University.
The National Advisory Board supports the Center’s efforts to influence current discussions relating to religion’s role in U.S. politics.
RIGOROUS
RESEARCH AND TEACHING

Fostering exceptional research and scholarship is central to the academic mission of the Center. The objective is to provide critical context and careful reflection on the intensely trafficked intersections of religion and politics in both the nation’s past and present and to maximize its reach among academics, students, journalists, policy makers, and fellow citizens. In the classroom, students develop a structure to engage in critical reflection, research and scholarship, and writing, whether enrolled in individual courses or pursuing our minor in religion and politics.
Students in Laurie Maffly-Kipp’s Mormonism course, Naomi Savin (class of 2019) and Sutanu Biswas (class of 2017), interview a scholar via Skype during one session.

“W hat strikes me as especially interesting about Wash U students is their eagerness to engage questions of meaning, purpose, and moral and religious frameworks for thinking about public issues. They are deeply concerned for intellectual issues, that is, that form the core of the humanities.”

1. Marie Griffith guides a student discussion about an assigned reading in her course, “American Religion, Gender, and Sexuality.”
The Danforth Center sponsors an ongoing colloquium to foster discussion of new scholarship in the broad domains of American religion, politics, and culture. It is a research-oriented workshop that aims to build a multidisciplinary community among students, fellows, and faculty, all drawn to the intellectual questions that animate the Center’s work.

Since the establishment of the John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics in 2010, many people and contributors have supported the Center. Their gifts directly support the Center’s research projects, faculty mentorship of undergraduate and graduate students, our postdoctoral fellows, our online journal, and our varied public programming.

THE DANFORTH FOUNDATION

The John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics owes its existence to the tremendous generosity of the Danforth Foundation, founded in 1927 by Mr. and Mrs. William H. Danforth. The Foundation’s commitment to funding St. Louis-based initiatives is well known, and in 2009 it announced a major gift of $30 million to Washington University to establish the Center. John C. Danforth, former Senator from Missouri and U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, was particularly engaged in the Center’s founding and remains a member of its national advisory board. This gift reflects Senator Danforth’s specific interest in religion and politics, as well as his dedication to his city, state, and nation. Center Director Marie Griffith holds the John C. Danforth Distinguished University Professorship that was established as a part of this generous founding gift.

DR. WILLIAM B. NEAVES AND THE REV. PRISCILLA WOOD NEAVES

In the fall of 2012, William B. Neaves, an emeritus trustee at Washington University in St. Louis, established a professorship in the John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics in honor of his wife, Priscilla Wood Neaves. The Reverend Mrs. Neaves is a former Methodist minister with a personal interest in the role of gender in religion and politics. Dr. Neaves has served on the Washington University Board of Trustees since 2003 and is a current member of the National Council for the School of Medicine. In addition to this generous gift to the Danforth Center, the couple donated Wood Neaves’s library containing books on gender and religion to Washington University’s Olin Library. Mark Valeri was installed as the inaugural holder of this professorship in 2015.

SEN. JOHN C. DANFORTH AND MRS. SALLY D. DANFORTH

Sen. Danforth established in 2016 a new distinguished professorship to honor his wife, Sally Dobson Danforth, and the important role she has played in his life and the lives of their children. Sen. Danforth is a retired politician and Episcopal priest, a partner with Dowd Bennett LLP in St. Louis, and an active member of the Center’s national advisory board. John Inazu was installed in September 2016 as the inaugural holder of this professorship, which is a joint appointment between the Washington University Law School and the John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics.

FACULTY APPOINTMENT

Anna F. Bialek will join the Center as Assistant Professor of Religion and Politics effective July 1, 2017.

Bialek’s research and teaching focus on contemporary religious ethics and political theory with an emphasis on feminist thought, Christian theology, and modern forms of power critique. Her first book project, “Vulnerability and Power: The Promise of Relational Ethics,” discusses vulnerability in contemporary ethics and politics. She will teach two undergraduate courses for the Center this fall, “Love and Reason” and “Solidarity and Silence: Religious Strategies in the Political Sphere.”

“Fannie is a teacher and scholar of tremendous depth and range in the area of religious ethics and political theory, already so mature that her Ph.D. advisor called her ‘simply one of the finest educators I have ever encountered, at any rank in the profession.’ Our vetting process has certainly borne out that claim,” Center Director Marie Griffith remarked.

Bialek earned a Ph.D. in Religious Studies from Brown University in 2016 and her bachelor’s degree in Religion summa cum laude from Princeton University. Competitive fellowships from the American Association of University Women, the Cogut Center for the Humanities at Brown, and the Pembroke Center for Teaching and Research on Women at Brown have offered support for her research.

“I am thrilled to join an institution where public engagement is part of the daily work of teaching and research.”

— ANNA F. BIALEK
Faculty
“What drew me to the Center in the first place was its dual commitment to educating both the Washington University student community and the broader public. We are able to interact with so many people across the country, especially through our programming and our online journal, and that outreach seems a crucial contribution we can make to a deeply divided, cynical nation.”

— R. MARIE GRIFFITH
Director, John C. Danforth Center on Religion and Politics
MISSION

The Center serves as an open venue for fostering rigorous scholarship and informing broad academic and public communities about the intersections of religion and U.S. politics.
